How to replace battery in hardwired smoke alarm

If you've noticed that your headlights aren't as bright, or you've needed to jump your car recently, it's a good idea to take your car to an auto parts store to check the battery. A dead car battery is frustrating, but you can replace it in a few simple steps.Detach the Battery CablesOpen your car hood and find the battery. It's a large box with a black top that has cables connected to it. Depending on the model of your vehicle it may sit near the back or off to the side of the engine. Once you locate the battery, you need to detach the positive and negative battery cables. You can do this using a pair of pliers or a wrench. The black cable is the negative cable and the red cable is the positive cable. You can also look for the plus and minus signs on the battery to ensure you're working with the correct side.Begin by detaching the negative black cable first. Then remove the positive red cable. If you remove the positive cable first, you might end up shorting out your vehicle's electrical system. If you have trouble removing these cables, you may need a battery terminal puller. This handy tool helps make sure you don't damage your battery if the cables are hard to remove.Take the Battery OutOnce you've disconnected both cables and removed them from the battery, you need to remove the battery from the vehicle. Car batteries are held in place by a clamp that helps keep the battery from shifting while the vehicle is in motion. You need to remove this clamp with a wrench or ratchet set. Once you remove this clamp, you should be able to lift the battery from the battery tray and remove it from the vehicle.Clean the Battery Tray and ConnectorsThe battery sits in a battery tray, and you may notice residue within in the tray. It's a good idea to use baking soda and water or some type of battery-cleaning fluid to clean the battery tray. You may also need to clean the cable connectors on the battery. Residue and corrosion can build up on the connectors, causing your battery to operate inefficiently or not at all. Cleaning these with a wire brush during battery replacements can help keep your car battery running well.Replace the Battery and Secure ItOnce you've cleaned out the tray and the connectors, it's time to put the new car battery into the tray. Simply place it in the same way that the old battery sat and secure it with the battery clamp. Use your wrench or ratchet set to secure the clamp over the battery.Reattach the Cables and Test the BatteryReattach the positive and negative battery cables as the last step. You can start with the positive battery cable first and then do the negative. Use a wrench to ensure that both cables are securely attached to the cable connectors. A loose battery cable can cause the battery to be ineffective. Once you have the cables secured, close the hood and start your vehicle. Check that all electrical components are working, like the radio and any digital components of the car. If you notice that something isn't working properly, make sure the battery cables are secured to the battery or drive to a local auto parts store and have them check that you replaced the battery properly. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET When it comes to replacing watch batteries, many people are afraid to tackle it by themselves, particularly if they think they don't have the right tools for the job. The truth is you don't need specialized tools to change your watch battery, and it's an easy task to do yourself. All you need are a few simple tips for how to replace a watch battery.Gather the Items You Need First, it's important to note that some watch manufacturers won't honor their warranties if anyone besides an authorized watch repair service opens the watch. Be sure to check with the maker to make sure you understand the policies for watches under warranty. If you want to proceed, make sure you have the following:A knife or small flat screwdriverReplacement batterySomething soft to put the watch on to prevent scratching, such as a towelDifferent Types of Watch Covers Watches generally come with one of three types of covers: screw-on, snap-on or secured with screws. Snap-on covers are the most popular, followed by screw-on covers. Take a look at the back of the watch to see which type you have.Covers secured with screws have a number of noticeable screws around the perimeter. Snap-on covers have a small lip or overlap located around the perimeter. You can insert a thin tool to pry the cover loose. Screw-on covers usually have a pattern of notches around the perimeter, where you can insert a tool to turn the whole cover.If you have a cover with screws, you can use a small screwdriver to remove all the screws and then remove the cover. For screw-on covers, long nosed pliers can be used by placing the two tips of the pliers into opposite notches and turning the cover. As the most common type of cover, snap-on covers are the focus of these instructions.Replacing the Battery Locate the lip on the back cover, wedge the tip of the screwdriver underneath and then push down to snap it up. A plastic cover underneath the main cover protects the clock mechanism. Pull this off by using a knife tip or screwdriver, being careful to pick it up near the edges to prevent damage to the mechanism.The battery is held by two metal clips overlapping the edges. One of the clips is fixed to the watch, but the other can be moved to pop the battery out. Use the tip of the knife to move the clip away from the battery and pull the battery out. Pull the clip back again to insert your replacement battery.Replace the plastic insert, making sure the slot in it aligns with the adjustment screw. Put the back cover on and snap it into place. This can usually be done without much force with your thumbs, but if you can't push it together this way, try placing the watch face down on a towel and pressing down slowly until it pops into place. You're all done until it's time for the next new battery. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Installing smoke alarms helps keep your home and family safe. Smoke detectors may be either battery-powered or wired directly into a home's electrical system. But almost all smoke detectors, including those that run on household current, has a battery. Detectors that are hardwired to your home's electrical system use a battery to provide backup power in case there is a power interruption.At times, you will likely notice a high-pitched chirping noise coming from your smoke detector if the batteries need to be changed, because it may happen even during the wee hours. It is best to anticipate and replace the batteries in your smoke detector before that particular noise occurs.Both the battery-operated and household-current smoke detectors produce the previously-mentioned chirping or chirping low-battery alarm. This alarm is different than the deafening like that of a blaring fire alarm that occurs during a fire. It is not a constant blast but an occasional chirp or beep only.If you have more smoke detectors in your house, it can be tricky to figure out which among them is chirping. Obviously, the lower the battery gets, the more the detector chirps. That is why you need to know when and how to change smoke alarm battery. Jump to Specific Section1.Remove CoverMost smoke detectors twist open, but some models have a plastic lock you open with a screwdriver, while others need to be popped open using your fingers. See your user's manual for specific instructions on how your model works. Tip: Before working on a hard-wired smoke detector, turn off the main power at your circuit breaker to avoid electrical shock.2.Replace BatteryOnce you remove the cover of the detector, it's easy to see how to change a smoke alarm battery. Simply remove the old battery and install the new one. Make sure the negative and positive connections match the labels in the smoke detector.Tip: Many smoke and carbon monoxide detectors use a 9v battery but some use lithium batteries that can last for ten years. 3.Test Smoke AlarmBefore you finish re-installing the smoke detector, make sure its new battery or batteries work. Locate the test button and press it for a few seconds to engage the test. If your test alarm doesn't sound, check battery connections and try different batteries. If your smoke alarm fails the test with new batteries, then you need to replace your smoke detector. Tip: Be safe. Do not re-install your smoke alarm unless you are sure it is working properly.4.Smoke Alarm Tips Fire safety experts recommend you replace your smoke alarm battery two times a year. A good rule of thumb is to change it when the clocks change in the fall and spring. Or, set a calendar reminder for when to change your smoke alarm batteries. Replace the backup battery in a hard-wire unit yearly whether it beeps or not. Mark the date you changed your battery on the inside of the smoke alarm. Buy a new smoke detector or smoke alarm every 10 years. After 10 years, smoke alarms expire. You can calculate the expiration date by looking on the back of the device to see the manufacture date. Check your smoke detectors, CO alarms and fire extinguishers at least once a year to ensure they are up-to-date. It's recommended you place smoke detectors inside each bedroom, right outside sleeping areas, on every level of your home, in the living room and near stairwells.Following these steps will make your home more secure in case of a fire. Keeping your smoke alarm up-to-date, as well as making sure the batteries work, will ensure your home remains safe.
